Additional information:

After our glorious high school years, I went to Oklahoma U., became a TriDelta, and got a BA in Anthropology. This led to several jobs in Archaeology, first on the Glen Canyon Project for what is now Lake Powell, and then at Snaketown, the classic HoHoKam site near Phoenix. Then a Master's degree at OU, and years in the National Park Service as an Archaeologist-Ranger at Walnut Canyon Nat. Monument outside Flagstaff, AZ. A full scholarship at SMU led to a PhD in Archaeology and more field work. With the decline of major Archaeology funding, and wishing to stay in the Southwest, I followed family tradition and pursued a Law degree at U. of New Mexico, where I then worked in Wildlife Law. The declining health of my parents resulted in a return to live in Amarillo.

I missed out on participating in some of the major events of our era (being a good straight & narrow conservative Amarillo girl!) like the Civil Rights Movement, VietNam protests, & the Hippy years, which I now regret. Over the years, I've become more of a wild-eyed radical. Teaching Navajo & Zuni college students & other life experiences led to a considerable broadening of my life views & an awareness of cultural differences & other viewpoints in our world. Now I'm increasingly intolerant of WASP-Religious bigotry and hypocrisy which, frankly, makes life in Amarillo a trial at times.

Early on, through scouting & other experiences, I realized that I wanted adventure beyond a "Mrs" degree and entire focus on family and the guys I dated or was "pinned" to along the way failed to change that view. I continue to enjoy dog training and dog agility, Archaeology, books, selling antiques, chuckwagon contests and pursuing interests in Law & Science. It has been a delightful & amazing trip, and there is still so much to do and learn! What a shame we're running out of time!
